

FRIENDS OF ROWE, EJECTED VETERAN, TO GIVE HIM HOME

Takoma Park Residents
Plan to Care for Aged
Man and His Sister.

Stirred by the sight of Edward S. Rowe, the veteran Confederate soldier who carried the colors of the South at the Battle of Yellow Tavern, living in a scantily furnished tent, where he has been compelled to seek shelter since being evicted from his little home last Tuesday, men, women and children residents of Takoma Park have come to the aid of the veteran's relief and will make provision for him this afternoon.

A house equal in size and comfort to the one from which the law evicted him because of pending litigation has been rented and all but the associations of his former little cottage where he and his sister have spent the last seventeen years and which means much to them both, will again be theirs.

The sixty-eight years that hang over the old veteran are emphasized by the worry and privation he has suffered within the last week. The crowding about his eyes and the furrows placed on his countenance by the years have deepened by the pangs of regret caused by being torn from his humble cottage.

The old man's eyes welled with tears this morning as he told with his finger pointing at a gray-haired woman not many years his senior, of "how my sister has stuck by and comforted me in this trouble." Mrs. Emma Brown, his sister, has borne the exposure and privation in the tent with more fortitude than he. "His constitution was weakened in the war of the sixties," she explained this morning, "and he feels the blow more than I do."

"We have always had to live in a tent," said the old man, as he looked quizzically at her for an answer. "We have been put out of our little home because some one with more money wants it. It belongs to us as much as it does to anyone else," he continued, after receiving an answer which his sister gave. "I was held up at the point of a gun by a deputy sheriff, whom I have always treated as a brother and friend. He did so because the law probably told him so. But he did it without papers or without right. That's the kind of treatment that makes Aliens."

Throughout the entire day persons who have come to know the old man and his sister during the seventeen years they have spent in Takoma Park visited them. Rowe refuses to be consoled by the knowledge that he must leave his little orchard and garden behind. He planted the orchard and "just watched it grow up," he told his friends, and felt sorry to leave its shadows and shelter.

Vashti, his dog, named after Augusta Evans' novel, sits constantly by the old man's side. Rowe says he is afraid to let her out of his sight lest some one would hurt her.

Mrs. Brown, the aged man's sister, has all the marks of the gentlewoman she is. She is well versed in literature and art, and declares that she and her brother have both been compelled to sacrifice their pride because of their eviction. "It will all come all right," she tells her grief-stricken brother. But the old man refuses to be comforted. He talks to his dog and cries, refuses to sleep, and says he will be happy again until reinstated in his little home.

BILL TO PROVIDE FOR TREATMENT OF INSANE PATIENTS

Frederick A. Fenning Wants
Voluntary Submission of Patients.

Frederick A. Fenning, an attorney of Washington, backed by a number of physicians of the District, is busy whipping into shape a bill to be introduced into Congress which would provide for the voluntary submission of patients for treatment for insanity in the District.

The form of the bill is not yet entirely worked out, it was stated today, but probably will be in shape for presentation to Congress within ten days, and so will be up for consideration this session.

"The old barbarous days when the insane were looked upon as being possessed of the devil, rather than as sick persons needing treatment, are past," said Mr. Fenning, discussing the proposed bill this morning. "And a person who is so fortunate to live in a jurisdiction having such laws can, of his motion, without the knowledge of any one, even his own family, appear for treatment at institutions for that purpose."

"The patient in this way knows that the State hospital or the private institution, subject as both are to the visits of zealous lunacy commissions, would not keep him if his condition did not warrant it. The stigma of a hideous public trial, when the patient often is treated as a criminal, would be avoided, and the realization of this most important factor in itself, would assist in the upbuilding of the disordered mind."

"If the ailment is one of which he can readily be cured the patient returns within a short time to his home and friends, without attracting any more attention than if he were upon a vacation. In this way all the advantages of modern treatment for insanity are conserved, and the unpleasant part to the patient, often the most detrimental part, is eliminated."

These are well made, on the very latest lasts, and include strap pumps and plain pumps, in all sizes and widths, and every pair is as white as snow. They are made with covered heels, or leather heels, and hand-turned soles. You will find it impossible to duplicate these pumps under $2.75 or possibly $3.00 a pair. Shoe Store—Second Floor.
